HOBBIES

Poking the glass underneath the creature which I have dubbed the "Squirmer", due to the funny little motion it makes whenever I do this.

REPORT'S FINDINGS

---

Though she was at first insistent on learning how to cook on her own, after four and a half star systems, she's finally letting me help. Tonight's dinner was unburnt and actually had a taste that differed from the usual charcoal avec almandine ration we've had for the last 300 or so days.

I inspected Janet's most recent dish.

"I made it with my heart this time." She tells me.

I smile, and jokingly reply,
"Well, now I really don't want it."

What does this need?", She turns to me.

I throw a sauce packet at her.
The packet slaps her in her flat stomach and drops to the ground.

"If you don't like me, just say it."
"I like you plenty... You just need to learn how to catch that's all."

She mumbles something coy yet slightly derogatory under her breath.

Post Note:

Oh yes and BTW, the creature from the planet we just left, has attached itself to our lower hull window and has taken control of the vessel's nav system, steering us to certain oblivion...

Squirmers Supplemental:

They have no centralized brain, but they see and feel and react to their environment in complex ways. Their body form looks simple, yet their swimming ability is the most economical in the animal kingdom. We know them in their swimming medusa form, but they live as much or more of their lives as a mysterious tiny tube called a polyp, planted on the underside of a rock.
